Questions received at the Annual Meeting of Corning Incorporated ("Corning" or the "Company") held on April 30, 2026

Question 1: "Corning receives an official score of 100 on the Human Rights Campaign's Corporate Equality Index. While participation in activist rating systems is itself concerning to shareholders, this score also indicates alignment with controversial medical interventions, including hormone regimens and gender transition surgery. What risk calculus does Corning employ in determining its charitable partnerships, as well as its policy posture on these issues?"

Answer: Corning does not base its decisions on any single external index or third-party viewpoint, and a score from an outside organization should not be understood as determining the Company's charitable partnerships, health benefits, or policy positions. Consistent with our Values of Integrity, The Individual, and Performance, we review these matters through established governance processes that consider legal requirements, employee well-being, business priorities, and long-term shareholder interests. Corning does not have a charitable partnership with the Human Rights Campaign.

Question 2: "Will Corning go back to in-person shareholder meetings?"

Answer: At this time, Corning intends to continue holding virtual annual meetings because they provide an efficient, cost-effective, and accessible format that enables broad shareholder participation.
