OneMain Financial Donates Laptops to Austin Independent School District to Expand Access to Financial Education

Austin, TX – June 22, 2026 – OneMain Financial today announced the donation of 100 Microsoft Surface laptops to Austin Independent School District as part of its efforts to expand access to technology and financial education for students building their financial futures.

The laptop donation is part of OneMain's nationwide initiative to repurpose surplus company technology and place it in classrooms, with priority given to schools participating in OneMain Credit Worthy, the company's flagship financial education program. By improving technology in classrooms teaching Credit Worthy, OneMain is helping schools deliver financial education and real-world learning to prepare students for life beyond the classroom.

In 2025, Texas passed legislation requiring students who enter high school in the 2026–2027 school year or later to complete a standalone, half-credit personal finance course in order to graduate. Credit Worthy helps students across the country meet mandated high school financial literacy requirements. By adopting Credit Worthy, schools can provide top-tier financial education curriculum at no cost to their districts.

The Credit Worthy curriculum provides students with digital interactive lessons in budgeting, credit and responsible financial decision-making. To date, the program has delivered more than 1 million hours of financial education and reached over 5,500 schools nationwide—encompassing 20% of all U.S. high schools.

In Texas, the program has reached more than 65,000 students since 2021, with nearly 200 schools participating in the 2025-2026 academic year.

"OneMain is dedicated to building stronger communities by supporting students and increasing access to opportunities," said Paola Garcia Abbo, Head of Impact at OneMain Financial. "By working with local schools, we are bringing financial education and technology resources directly into classrooms, helping students gain the knowledge, skills and confidence to shape their futures."

OneMain's investment reflects its deep roots in Texas and its ongoing commitment to the communities it serves. The company employs nearly 900 people across two corporate offices and 111 community-based branches throughout the state, working every day to help hardworking Texans improve their financial well-being.
