

Johnson & Johnson Postpones 2020 Medical Devices Business Review Due to the Coronavirus

April 1, 2020

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J., April 1, 2020 /PRNewswire/ -- Johnson & Johnson (NYSE: JNJ) today announced that, in light of the evolving situation with the coronavirus outbreak (COVID-19), it will reschedule its 2020 Medical Devices Business Review that was planned to take place on May 13, 2020. Johnson & Johnson will continue to monitor the situation closely and follow guidance from health authorities to determine a future date.

The decision was made to protect the health and safety of employees, partners and attendees, while also supporting the wider public effort to slow the spread of the virus as the global COVID-19 pandemic continues to develop.

As a leader in global health, Johnson & Johnson's top priority remains our patients, customers and employees. We are partnering with global and local health authorities to address immediate and long-term health care needs, to ensure sustainable supply of our critical medicines, as well as to research potential vaccines and therapeutics. We will remain on the front lines of this health crisis, bringing our full resources and minds to combat it.
